

THE WHIG STANDARD.

From the Baltimore American.

THE CLAY BANNER.

Come with the banner
Of good HARRY CLAY,
Who in peace and in war
Was his country's firm stay:
Spread it wide to the breeze,
We are freemen who rear it,
And whate'er its fate be,
We'll willingly share it.

We are some of the lads who in '40 were true
To the gallant old hero of Tippecanoe.
For cute Van and Calhoun
They spread their own snares,
And in these they are caught.
They're for tariff—no tariff,
This, that thing and 't'other,
And so much and nothing,
That they honest men bother.

We are some of the lads who in '40 were true
To the gallant old hero of Tippecanoe.
Then up with the banner
Of bold HARRY CLAY,
He has told us his course
In his frank, manly way;
And we know that old Cal
Was never to Rome
More devoted than he
To the land of his home.

We are some of the lads who in '40 were true
To the gallant old hero of Tippecanoe.
To our Whig friends abroad,
Hearty greetings we send—
Wishing wisdom and peace
May their counsels attend,
And prosperity's star
Shed its light on their way,
While they strive in the cause
Of our Country and CLAY.

We are some of the lads who in '40 were true
To the gallant old hero of Tippecanoe.

CHANTING THE "MISERERE" AT ROME.

Thirteen candles, in the form of a triangle, are lighted up when the chanting of the lamentations commences. One after another is extinguished as it proceeds, until the last one at the top of the triangle, which represents Christ, is put out. The others, representing the prophets and good men that preceded our Saviour, one by one go out in the night of the grave, and the lamentation grows wilder and deeper. But as the Prophet of Prophets, the Light, the Hope of the World, disappeared, the lament suddenly ceased. Not a sound was heard amid the deepening gloom. The catastrophe was a deepening shock too great to admit of any further description. The good and great, seemed struck dumb by this last, this greatest woe. Stunned and stupefied, he could not contemplate the mighty disaster. I never felt a heavier pressure on my heart than at this moment. The chapel was packed in every inch of it, even out of the doors, far back into the open hall, and yet not a sound was heard. I could hear the breathing of the mighty multitude, and amid it the frequent half drawn sigh. Like the chanter, each man seemed to say, "Christ is gone! We are orphans—all orphans!"

The silence at length became too painful. I thought I should shriek out in agony, when suddenly a low wail, so desolate and yet so sweet, so despairing and yet so tender, like the last strain of a broken heart, slowly stole out from the distant enclosure and swelled over the throng, that the tears rushed unbidden to my eyes, and I could have wept like a child in sympathy. It then died away, as if the grief were too great for the strain. Fainter and fainter, like the tone of a lute, it sunk away, as if its last strain was over, when suddenly there burst through the arches a cry so piercing and shrill that it seemed not the voice of song, but the language of a wounded and dying heart in its last agonizing throbs. The multitude swayed to it like the forest to the blast. Again it ceased, and the broken sobs of exhausted grief alone were heard. In a moment the whole choir joined their lament, and seemed to weep with the weeper. After a few notes they paused again, and that sweet, melancholy voice mourned alone. Its note is still in my ear. I wanted to see the singer. It seemed that such sounds could come from nothing but a broken heart. Oh, how unlike the joyful, the triumphant anthem that swept through the same chapel on the morning that symbolized his resurrection!—Cor. N. Y. Tribune.

Madame George Sand.—Nothing could exceed the extreme eccentricity of this woman's character. On her debut in the world of letters, she adopted the name she now bears, and which is composed of the first syllable of that of her first adorer, Jules Sandeau. Not satisfied with assuming this masculine denomination, she adopted at the same time the dress of a man, and was often seen abroad in the garb of a dandy, smoking a cigar. Later she appeared in a more feminine costume. Her life is passed in the greatest retirement, and her society is exclusively composed of literary or scientific men. At the outset of her career she published all her works in the "Revue des Deux Mondes," but a pecuniary squabble with the editor of that review made her seek other means of publication. During some time she wrote in a paper edited by L'Abbe de Lammenais. Her articles were couched in the very highest strain of republican feeling, but, like all her writings, were full of mind and energy.

As a novelist and a philosopher, she is deservedly criticised and dreaded; but as a narrator and an observer, she is peerless. Her Lettres d'un Voyageur, addressed to her private friends, and published in the "Revue des Deux Mondes," are superior to any recent publication in the French language. If at times they contain some of the blunders of her mere works of imagination they are likewise teeming with beauties of the highest order. Strong and vigorous thoughts lay before the reader what the mind of George Sand was before the false vanity of forming a new order of things had induced her to taint her pen and her imagination by the turpitudes she has poured out upon the world. She now edits, conjointly with Pierre Leroux, the Revue Independente. There is in her latter publications a more subdued and reflective tone, which argues well for the improvement of her mind, and which, if persevered in, will unquestionably raise her to the very highest pitch of literary celebrity. Hitherto, the injudicious employment of her great and undoubted genius, which none can contest, has inclined one to look upon it with the sorrowful regret with which we must ever regard—Genius gone mad.

COMMUNICATION.

Extract of a Letter from the Late Secretary of of Iowa Territory, to a Friend in this District.
BURLINGTON, IOWA TER.,
November 1, 1843.

 Your letter of the 18th ult., confirming or rather clinching the confirmation of the report of my removal from the office of Secretary of this Territory, was received by last night's mail. A private letter from Washington, dated 13th ult., to a friend in this place, communicating the first certain intelligence, was received on Sunday night, though the report of the fact originated in a St. Louis paper; so that the contents of yours did not produce so great a shock as you anticipated.

It is true, as you remark, that I will have to bear the misfortune—and I do not know what good to myself is to grow out of any representation I might make of my (by no means peculiar) case; for it is evident, and has been quite clear for many a day, that every sentiment of virtue and humanity, of good sense and decency, of common honor and honesty, has been totally extinct in the mind of the "weak, vacillating, and unfaithful," acting President.

If there is any benefit to result from Mr. Tyler's removals, it can only be by judicious comments on the part of the public journals; and that benefit can only result to the country generally, and not to individuals made the victims of the petty despotism and perfidy of the false traitors whose misrule, if perpetuated, must surely utterly ruin the land. This good then can only be produced by rousing the Whigs to a sense of the monstrous injustice and outrage committed against the party on political principles, or rather to gratify the rabid malice of John Tyler towards Mr. Clay. It is the first insinuation, I believe, in the history of our Government, when civil offices have been set up for public auction; for it is now as clear as a sunbeam that the present administration is daily engaged in bartering them away for their own use and behoof.

I do not know that there is anything peculiar in my case, except that I never made application myself for the office, and that Gen. Harrison in conferring it upon me, was actuated (believing me to be "honest and competent") by the consideration of family friendships of ancient date, and to gratify Gov. Chambers, his next dear friend—the man who, pertinaciously adhered to him in good and evil report, closed his eyes in death. "and would have died for him any day these thirty years." There may be something in this! for the acting President has no regard for the memory or the sacred recollections, public and private, of the President elect.

Again: I have disbursed in the brief space of my official career, in the capacity of Secretary of Iowa Territory, the sum of $70,000, within a fraction, the full amount entrusted to my charge, and the disbursement of the greater part of which belonged as much to the duties of any other government office in the territory—and I have now before me, legal duplicate vouchers for more than that sum, leaving the Government my debtor, as can easily be made appear in a court of justice. There may be something in this—I am no defaulter. I might add too, that for the purpose of collecting this money, I have been compelled to travel over two thousand miles, to all parts of the country, at the very worst season of the year, to the great risk of my health and life, and for which I have not received one dollar compensation.

I am informed, from good authority, that there is at this moment, sojourning at Washington, an editor by the name of Vespasian Ellis, conducting John Tyler's organ at St. Louis, and one of the bloodiest of his myrmidon cutthroats. This scoundrel I hear is boasting of the influence particularly exerted by him in my removal. He is a man of vile and infamous character, and now counselling the President, who scruples not to employ all such to assist him in operating the guillotine. Another gentleman, who I am well informed, has been active in my removal, recently returned from headquarters, is one "Silas Reed," Mr. Tyler's surveyor-general for the Missouri district, who makes his appearance occasionally in the St. Louis Democrat in reply to charges preferred against him, but is considered past all vindication. He is the fellow, who, when he had been living for years in Missouri and Illinois, and actually holding office in those States, took a trip to Washington, and made oath that he was a citizen of the District of Columbia, in order that he might take the benefit of the bankrupt law in that District.

By such miscreants as these, who use Mr. Tyler for their own dishonest and selfish ends, or are used by him (it makes but little difference) to do his dirty work, I have been removed from office.

It may be urged as an excuse for my removal (if long continuance in a course of barefaced corruption has not rendered them indifferent to the indignation of the honest and honorable) that a petition for it, from citizens of Iowa, was presented to the President. 'Tis true that such a petition, having its origin in pique and selfishness, (as the following letter will show, was forwarded from Iowa city. But at the same time a counter petition for my continuance, of much more respectable character, accompanied by letters of strongest language in my favor, from private citizens and members of the Legislative Assembly was forwarded to him, which it is fair to suppose reached him. So much for this the only shadow of an excuse.

BURLINGTON, IOWA TER.,
March 8, 1843.

SIR: I have just been informed by letters from friends in Iowa City that a memorial from your excellency, purporting to be a recommendation for the removal of the Secretary of the Territory, was in circulation, and unwonted efforts used to have it numerously signed. To meet this issue, I came at once to the conclusion to throw myself upon your sense of justice alone, entertaining no apprehension of a wrong decision on your part, be that whatsoever it may. Then, sir, if the paper above referred to be worthy of your consideration, I pledge myself to prove wholly destitute of foundation whatever may appear therein in derogation of my reputation as a civil officer of the Government or integrity as a man, and that by highly respectable and intelligent gentlemen from all quarters of the Territory, by every member of the late Legislative Assembly of both houses, and all political parties. My quarrel, sir, is not with the good people of Iowa, with whom I have to do in my official capacity, but with knaves, who annually through the Capital, seeking to plunder the Government, and involve me in inextricable difficulties. Not the least among these is the editor of a newspaper hackneyed in the most scurrilous abuse of your administration, and applying every opprobrious epithet to yourself.

I have the honor to be, your excellency's obedient servant,
O. H. W. STULL,
Sec. Territory.

His excellency JOHN TYLER,
President U. S., Washington.

A remonstrance against my removal and petition for my restoration to office is, I understand, in circulation here, and has received the signatures of a great number of our best citizens, but I must especially avail myself of this opportunity to assure you that I have not entertained the slightest wish on the subject, and have had as little agency in the matter, directly or indirectly. I would soon to hold office for another solitary day under John Tyler, nevertheless I am assured that acute suffering to a very large female family must, beyond all peradventure, ensue, as the consequence of my wanton violent expulsion from office.

My successor, a Mr. Burr, from Washington latterly, has not yet arrived. Of him I know nothing; but from an editorial article in the last "Old School Democrat," (the paper of the before mentioned Vespasian Ellis,) he is just such a man as would expect, and would now receive, office from John Tyler. From this article I gather that until the election of General Harrison was certain beyond a doubt, he was a decided Van Burenite. That being certain, with easy truth, he came out a strong Harrison man, and, like all apostates, that there might be no doubt of the sincerity of his recantation, he was loud in his professions of devotion, became the editor of the "New York Whig," and the author of "The Life and Times of Harrison." After the death of the lamented Harrison, he participated in the apostasy of John Tyler, and is now, according to Mr. Ellis, a "firm and fast friend of the President," (made so, no doubt, by an office given him in the General Land Office, one in the Post Office Department, and his present promotion,) and is a "sterling Democrat," and that paper is now (long a life to modesty and consistency) asking for him of the democrats of Iowa a "warm and cordial reception."

O. H. W. STULL,
Late Sec'y Iowa Territory.

P. S. I cannot refrain from adding, as a beautiful accompaniment and commentary upon the facts set forth in the foregoing, and the course of the President generally, the following extracts from official papers of Mr. Tyler. I allude to his first message to Congress, and a circular to the officers of Government:

"It is not intended that any officer shall be restrained in the free and proper expression and maintenance of his opinions respecting public men or public measures, or in the exercise, to the fullest degree, of the constitutional right of suffrage. But persons employed under the Government, and paid for their services out of the public treasury, are not expected to take active or officious parts in attempts to influence the minds or votes of others, such conduct being deemed inconsistent with the spirit of the Constitution and the duties of public agents acting under it; and the President is resolved, so far as depends upon him, that while the exercise of the elective franchise by the people shall be free from undue influences of official station and authority, opinion shall be free among officers and agents of the Government."

"The power of appointing to office is one of a character the most delicate and responsible. The appointing power is evermore exposed to be led into error. With anxious solicitude to select the most trustworthy for official station, I cannot be supposed to possess a personal knowledge of the qualifications of every applicant. I deem it, therefore, proper, in this most public manner, to invite on the part of the Senate a just scrutiny into the character and pretensions of every person whom I may bring to their notice in the regular form of nomination to office. Unless persons every way trustworthy are employed in the public service, corruption and irregularity will inevitably follow. I shall with the greatest cheerfulness acquiesce in the decision of that body, and regarding it as wisely constituted to aid the Executive Department in the performance of this delicate duty, I shall look to its "consent and advice" as given only in the furtherance of the best interests of the country. I shall also, at the earliest proper occasion, invite the attention of Congress to such measures as in my judgement will be best calculated to regulate and control the Executive power in reference to this vitally important subject."

A CARD.—The undersigned takes this method to return to the Friends and Citizens his thanks for their kind attentions at the fire Monday evening, and for rescuing his stock from the devouring element. He has the pleasure of announcing to the public that his assortment of Stoves, Tin and Sheet Iron Ware, and also, manufacturing shop, remain uninjured, and that he is now as before open and ready to wait upon his friends, and respectfully solicits a continuance of their favors.
